Gin Palace

Everyone knows the abbreviated history of gin - at the end of the eighteenth century, with tonic it is considered as a drink, thanks to which it allowed the British to take and keep India. All thanks to the quinine contained in the tonic, which protected the soldiers from malaria.

It has changed a bit since then and now we have four types of gin:

London Dry Gin - perfect for drinks, has a citrus aftertaste,

Plymouth type Gin - very rich aroma compared to London Dry Gin,

Old Tom Gin - sweetened gin,

Genever - is sweeter than Old Tom, slightly weaker, fragrant.

We all have to admit that gin is experiencing a second youth, because every few months we can see a new gin appearing on the market.

For this reason, we decided to sort our collection of gins into the regions they come from and the "style" they represent.

Scottish Malt Whisky

The Whisky Regions

Scotland has historically been divided into five whisky-making regions: Lowland, Highlands and Islands, Speyside, Campbeltown and Islay. While the diversity of single malts is one of Scotland's greatest joys, it is accepted that there can be similarities between those made in each of the five regions.

Lowland

Lowland Single Malts are distilled south of the Highland Line, which runs between Greenock in the west and Dundee in the east, separating the Lowlands from the Highlands. Whiskies from this region are typically lighter in style. They are noted for a fragrant, floral character with some fruity notes.

AILSABAY

The distillery is in the Lowlands, on the Clyde Coast looking out towards Ailsa Craig, Kintyre and Arran.

Ailsa Bay	48.9%	50ml	£16.00

Gordon & MacPhail

Our Philosophy

THE WOOD MAKES THE WHISKY

Since 1895, Gordon & MacPhail have bottled whisky from the majority of Scotland's distilleries.

However, where others simply bottle whisky, we focus on maturing it.

Using the most valuable tool we have, our experience, we understand casks from the inside out.

Every cask in our portfolio has a fate. Each one is thoughtfully combined with a specific clear new make spirit to create a complex, subtle and balanced whisky, be it eight years old or seventy-five years old.

It is this awareness of our casks, coupled with our knowledge of the diverse spirits made by the different distilleries across Scotland, which guarantees the highest quality for every whisky in our range.
